

436AD

The last Roman troops leave Britain

Theoderic wanted to reach the Rhone. He led his army in person against NAR BONNE, where he remained until 437 in order to lay siege to the city. Just when it was about to fall, the general LITORIVS, second in Command after Aetius appeared on the scene, smashed through the Gothic siege lines with his Hunnic horsemen, put the enemy to flight, and for the time supplied the

the growing population with grain

436AD

The Huns destroy Burgundian Kingdom of Worms